

George

Hillary

Nothing Venture, Nothing Win. Edmund Hillary

As a younger kid, actually,
I really hated the connection, to be honest. It took a, it took a long time to become comfortable with it because, you know, you think you, you do something in your local school sports team and everyone goes, oh, well your, your grandfather climbed Everest and you haven't done that.

20	Summary

I'm George Hillary – yes, Edmund's grandson.
Like him, I believe mountains belong to everyone. I make them accessible through expeditions, experiences, and stories.

I share my own perspective in the context of historical explorers, modern pioneers, and current challenges.

Core Pillars

The Legacy Connection

Standing on the shoulders of giants, with humility, respect, and a smile.

Key Principles of Communication

06

Essential qualities that should be present in all communication.

- ^ Making mountains accessible to everyone
- ^ Prioritizing approachability rather than authority
- ^ Using humor when discussing achievements
- ^ Recognizing and celebrating the successes of others

Additional Layers

Further perspectives and content for climbers and enthusiasts who want to go deeper.

- ^ Exploring the psychological aspects of performance
- ^ Providing honest and open discussion about real challenges
- ^ Connecting different generations and audiences
- ^ Offering practical advice and tips for climbing and mountaineering

Values

What Makes Me Unique

Honest storytelling that makes mountains and the Hillary legacy accessible to all.

Authenticity

Being honest and genuine—sharing my real experiences and making both mountaineering and the Hillary family legacy accessible to everyone.

Connection

Bringing people closer to nature and each other by connecting history with the present—through clear storytelling, education, and humor.

Balance

Acknowledging both the highs and the lows in every adventure. Staying grounded despite the summits I've reached and because of the challenges I've faced.

Innovation

Blending modern approaches to climbing with a deep respect for mountaineering history.

Become the bridge between climbing insiders and curious outsiders. The trusted voice who makes everyone. From top climbers to Netflix viewers.

Purpose

Inspire, Uplift, and Connect

My purpose is to democratize mountaineering stories and inspire a new generation to care about mountains and exploration by sharing authentic, nuanced perspectives that bridge historical achievements with modern adventures.

8

Immediate Objectives

- ^ Build commercial viability for speaking career
- ^ Create philanthropic impact through increased visibility
- ^ Transition from FinTech to full-time exploration/speaking

Long Term Objectives

- ^ First name recognition: "George" not "Hillary's grandson."
- ^ Make people care about mountain preservation and environmental impact
- ^ Become a "David Attenborough" figure for mountaineering - trusted voice that inspires action

Personality

Brand Archetypes

Using multiple brand archetypes better reflects the real complexity of who I am. This approach helps clearly express my personality through recognizable brand principles.

My public image is shaped by three main archetypes: the Explorer-Seeker (curious and adventurous), the Citizen-Networker (community-oriented and connecting people), and the Guardian-Caregiver (supportive and protective).

Personality

Explorer, Guardian, Citizen

"Just another climber who happens to have a famous last name."

The Explorer-Seeker

Drives the core narrative: freedom, adventure, and discovery.

Exploration is beyond geography and physical space, it's about finding authentic ways to carry a legacy forward without being crushed by it.

The Guardian-Caregiver

Softens the traditional view of explorer's solitude.

We can protect mountains by making people care about them, sharing personal experiences to keep climbers safe, and telling stories others might inflate or even ignore.

The Citizen-Networker

Grounds me despite the extraordinary legacy of my name.

This is the George who balances elite boutique expeditions and everyday common adventures.

Freedom to find your own path, even when everyone expects you to follow footsteps.

Audience

People Who Never Rest

The audience is not seen through the prism of "climbers" or "non-climbers." I share stories for the curious, regardless of whether their Everest is literal or metaphorical.

General audience, curious people with casual interest in adventure

They might not know what a crampon is, but they understand courage.

- ^ Watched Free Solo, wondered what drives people to risk that much. Find out how much of life lies outside of the comfort zone
- ^ Climb gyms on Tuesdays, dream of real mountains. Look for motivation beyond traditional sports.

Adventure enthusiasts and climbing community members

Know the difference between the Hillary Step and the Geneva Spur

- ^ Seeking authentic voices in the climbing world
- ^ Interested in historical context and modern perspectives
- ^ Appreciate climbing tips and insights and can relate from firsthand experience

Tone of Voice

Complex topics, simply put

Serious stories about serious accolades, told by someone who doesn't take himself too seriously

Style Guide

There's real value in honest summit stories—personal, maybe a bit political, but always authentic and focused on what comes after.

Opening Moves

- ^ Share a personal experience or anecdote
- ^ Hook with unexpected angles
- ^ Never start with credentials

Build The Engagement

- ^ Show historical context, celebrate else's achievement
- ^ Describe modern reality, often surprising or even controversial
- ^ Use universal truths in a relatable context

Don't Use

- ^ Overused metaphors ("journey")
- ^ Obsolete terms and phrases ("conquered summit")
- ^ Excessive adventure jargon without context
- ^ Corporate inspiration speak

Key Principles

Authentic. Connecting. Inclusive.

Every piece of content should resonate with at least two audience layers.

If both a corporate executive and a climbing guide find value, we've nailed it.

Audience groups bleed into each other and connect on the same platforms. George speaks to all of them simultaneously by:

1. Leading with story
2. Layering in history and expertise
3. Maintaining humor
4. Staying humble

Key Principles

For each piece of content, we adjust the altitude

01

Sea Level

Universal human stories anyone can relate to.

02

Base Camp

Adventure stories with life lessons, celebrating heroes and history, challenges and downsides of athletes.

03

Summit

Deep dives for those who really want to understand, technical insights wrapped in accessible narrative.

I continue my grandfather's mission of making mountains accessible to all, adding the transparency and authenticity that modern audiences seek.

Goals and Metrics

A way of an explorer-storyteller

Besides following traditional metrics such as reach and engagement, or the number of public speaking opportunities, we also keep an eye out for the shift from "Edmund's grandson" to "George the explorer who happens to be a Hillary."

Network Growth

New industry connections and collaborations

Speaking referrals and opportunities

Media relationships and visibility

Content Performance

Identifying top performing formats

Story shares, post saves and reshares

Reach, engagement, meaningful comments and DM inquiries

Timeframe

First 6 months are pure foundation building (low financial return)

Months 7-12 build momentum

After the first 12 months, a real transition becomes possible

New Revenue Streams

Public speaking appearances

Content courses and master classes

Partnerships/sponsorships

Boutique guided tours

Summary

How to Play and How to Win

What I Do

20

- ^ Tell a story others won't
- ^ Provide historical context to enrich the narrative
- ^ Highlight and celebrate the achievements of others
- ^ Stay humble while being bold

What I Do Not Do

- ^ Only present one perspective or side of the story
- ^ Ignore the challenges of mountaineering
- ^ Focus solely on my own accomplishments
- ^ Use climbing jargon without explaining it clearly

I inherited my grandfather’s humor, along with his name.
